2,000,000 Feet of Lumber Gone.

Flint & Holton's Lumber Yard in Flames.

The Fire Brigade Handicapped.

(Monday's Daily.)
Flint & Holton's lumber yard was set on fire this afternoon by a spark from the smoke stack. The fire spread rapidly, and the fire engine was engaged doing the work near the depot. The fire was extinguished before the time the engine was moved. By this time the engine was at last got to work several lumber piles were in flames. The alarm was sounded at about 1:25 p.m. and about seven lumber piles in the yard were ablaze, and the bridge was working like a steam locomotive. An employee of the mill estimated that there were about 2,000,000 feet of lumber in the fire. The wind was from the south-east, and as the mill is east of the lumber yard, it was ignited by sparks in different places, and spectators stood ready to help in case of need. The fire was extinguished at 2:45 the flames were still spreading, the wind was from the north-east, and the fire was spreading through the yard.
A small portion of the lumber in the yard was in flames. The fire was

the fire was spreading through the yard.

(Tuesday's Daily.)
The extent of the fire in Flint & Holton's lumber yard was not fully known until the report given in the Intelligence yesterday.
Mr. Holton took an inventory of stock lost, and said that the loss was within the estimate when he stated that 2,000,000 feet and that the value would be from $25,000 to $30,000. The fire started on the east side of the yard, at the point of starting. The heat from the flames was intense, yet the northmen did not start working until the fire was in the vicinity of the fire was in danger, but none were burned. At 6 p.m.
Mr. Holton finished his inventory, and brought lunch at the office, which they partook of heartily. At 7:30 the fire had run to some and the bridge confined its operations to despatching the lumber.
Machine cylinders swept over the burned district and threatened to carry the sparks to adjoining property, but happily any such misfortune was averted.

danger, but none were burned. At 6 p.m.
Mr. Holton finished his inventory, and
its operations to despatching the lumber.
Machine cylinders swept over the burned
misfortune was averted.

(Tuesday's Daily.)
the report given in the Intelligence yesterday.
Mr. Holton took an inventory of stock
be from $25,000 to $30,000. The fire started on the east side of the yard, at

THE RIEL PORTRAIT.

The Hon. T. White Explains His Exposure

We give the following extracts from a public speech, made by the Hon. Thomas White at Merrickville, refuting the slanderous charge made against him of insulting the French Canadians, when in reality he was exposing the vilest lies told by the Canadian authorities made by the Rielists, for-matters, and their desperate attempts to foment discord.

"I was dealing with this new issue which our fellow subjects in the Province of Quebec have had presented to them, which our opponents have placed before the people of this country, and I was pointing out what had occurred at the nomination for the County of Chambly. I stated that Mr. Chapleau, the Secretary of State, while addressing the election on the occasion had presented to him on large boards, by pre-concerted arrangement, portraits of Louis Riel with a rope around his neck and a saw of iron, and that he had seen, while at the same moment a rope was attempted to be thrown around his (Mr. Chapleau's) own neck. I exhibited a copy of the portrait which had been shown to Mr. Chapleau on that occasion, and I said—

"These Liberals in the province of Quebec, who are so anxious to excite the passions of the people, and who are so anxious to excite religious prejudices, are actually causing this portrait to be hung on the walls of the houses of the people, along the side of the portraits of the holy men of the church, and they are thus inciting to good feeling."

"That was the statement which I made, and if anyone can find that statement a slandering of the Roman Catholic Church, or of the saints of that church, all I can say is that his powers of vision are much greater than my own, and his powers of persuasion much greater than mine. It is either a lie or proper for anyone to possess (Hear, hear). That gentleman, was the precise position I took on that occasion. As I have said, I do not desire to say anything of the kind, and in every one of those speeches, instead of insulting my French-Canadian fellow-subjects, I spoke of them in the highest terms I could. I pointed out that they had been our allies for years past, because they believed in the policy which the Conservative party had adopted as being for the best interests of the country at large, that they were conservative by nature, by tradition and education, and I expressed the opinion, the accuracy of which the next few weeks will determine, that those who believed, they were going back on their word, and that the efforts of our opponents to arouse the national and religious sentiments by means of this new issue, would find themselves grievously mistaken."

"While in the country I dealt with this question as with others on its merits, and in a manner which, I am confident, could not be considered offensive to any one. I hold the strongest opinions in relation to the policy to be used in the construction of any attempt to excite national or religious animosities in connection with our political controversies. In this country, where we have different races and different religions, we must have all the peace and unity in building up our country, in working shoulder to shoulder—no matter what may be the difference in our political opinions, and the future of this country, the great Dominion, lies in the hands of the people who attempt to excite religious or national prejudice amongst the people.
But, ladies and gentlemen, it was wrong for me to have come to this country under circumstances I have described, this portrait of Louis Riel, what shall we say of the men in Quebec the leaders of the Liberal party in that Province, who caused this portrait to be published, and who made it most effective in arousing the prejudices of the people, and who, in Chambly, had it presented to Mr. Chapleau in order to turn the crowd against him; who, having made this charge, and having made it effective, they then turned to the people and told them to hang it up, and that they were in their houses so to remind them of the death of Louis Riel, and of their duty as presented upon them by the Liberal party, to avenge his death by driving from the country the men who allowed the law in his case to take its course? What shall we say to the black blasphemy of Mr. Morier, who, on the Champ de Mars, compared Riel to the Saviour of mankind, and who, in Chambly, at Regina to the sacrifice on Calvary?
That was what the Liberals in the Province of Quebec indulged in, and yet, because a portrait which they themselves caused to be published, and which they themselves caused to be hung up, and which Ontario as an evidence of the extent to which they are going, I am to be charged with having insulted my Roman Catholic fellow-subjects, and I am to be charged with this question has been raised, and I regret that this question has been raised by a religious question. It is not a religious question. Louis Riel achieved the rebellion, not because he was a Roman Catholic, but because he was a man of a Roman Catholic, but because he was a man in opposition to the Roman Catholic protest in this his purely personal interest."

THE FLEET CRIMINAL.
(From the Belfast Whig, 28th.)

Some interesting information with regard to the religion of the Royal Irish Regiment was elicited in the House of Commons on Tuesday last, by a question put by the chief secretary by Mr. Hooper, M.P.
It would appear that most of the rank and file are Catholics, while most of the officers are Protestants. The total strength of the force is 237 officers, 249 head constantes, 2,883 sergeants and acting sergeants and 8,750 constables. Taking the force as a whole, it is composed of 216 of the force are Protestants, 15 Roman Catholics and only 6 Presbyterians. Therefore, if the question of religion is to be taken into account in the appointments, the Presbyterians are in a minority, the Catholics being 140, and the Presbyterians, 109. Catholics and 10 Presbyterians. The Catholic element is predominated among the sergeants and acting sergeants, and the Protestants number of whom—2,583—there are 650 Episcopalian, 1,801 Catholics and 115 Presbyterians. Among 9,750 men who compose the rank and file of the constabulary there are 680 Protestants, 7,310 Catholics, Presbyterians, and 7,310 Catholics. It will thus be seen that the larger proportion by far of the whole force is Roman Catholic.
The Presbyterians element in the force is represented by 109 officers, 140 head constantes, and 1,090 constables. The total
